Christmas at Palais Hindu is your dream come true

So, what's making headlines at Palais Hindu's Christmas World this Christmas? Snow flocked trees! As the main showpiece, the Christmas tree is the place to display some true works of art and artistic talent. Christmas trees featuring cool, white-flocked branches are among the hottest trends this holiday season. Flocked trees are great for themes that are contemporary, traditional, or something in between, and provide a fresh, modern appeal to any home's holiday decor. What's the buzz on colors? Well, the trend is for unusual colors, and hues that made a splash on the international fashion runways are now making their way onto Christmas ornaments.

While traditional reds and greens and their more contemporary cousins remain a mainstay, the Christmas Colors for 2012 provide a fresh approach to the season with hues like aqua, pumpkin and pistachio. Other "hot" color trends include jewel tones like wine, ruby and teal, and the bright colors of purple and pink. In metals, look for lots of silver as well as yellow golds, copper and bronze. We've added them to almost all our trees in one way or another. We've mixed two of these - gold and silver - with black on our tribute to carnival 2013 tree, also known as our Music Tree.

We've added feathered plumes for just the perfect Carnival touch. Hot and happening, feathers are being added everywhere.

Fashion trends de-

one of them. This sophisticated yet classic combination of "timeless elegance" is one of this year's hottest color palettes for fashion and home, and now one of the choicest color schemes for the holidays. Already a huge trend in Europe, black and white holiday decorations are making a splash in America too this year. Pairing them with red or green puts your own spin on traditional, while mixing them with the predominant color in your home might help them blend in. You could also go for extra glitz: adding some metallic touches in gold or copper tones make for a somewhat quieter scheme, while the shine of silver or platinum emphasizes this duo. We, of course, picked shiny silver to go with our black and white combination. We love shine!

mand bold contrasts, and 2012 will see the pairing of black and white as

Lakers' Steve Blake out 6-8 weeks

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. -- Los Angeles Lakers guard Steve Blake will undergo laparoscopic surgery Wednesday to repair a torn abdominal muscle, the team announced Monday.

Blake is expected to miss a minimum of six to eight weeks after the surgery, which will be performed by Dr. Craig Smith.

Blake has missed the Lakers' past 10 games because of his abdominal injury, which he sustained in a game against the Detroit Pistons on Nov. 4.

The 10-year veteran averaged 5.1 points, 2.4 rebounds, 3.4 assists and 1.3 steals in the seven games he played this season before the injury.

"It's a big concern for me," Kobe Bryant said about Blake. "Steve and I have always played extremely well together. He's a clutch shooter, and he's a tough competitor. That's one of the things I like about him, his toughness. So, we're going to be missing a lot with him being out. I'm not sure how long he is going to be out, but I'm assuming it's going to be a while. Hopefully he can keep his head in it and come back ready to go."

Steve Nash (fractured fibula in his left leg) participated in shooting and ballhandling exercises with player development coach Phil Handy on Monday. He will travel with the team on its three-game road trip through Houston, New Orleans and Oklahoma City but is not expected to play.

"When he feels secure physically -- whether he's playing well (in practice) or not -- I think he'll come back," Lakers coach Mike D'Antoni said of Nash. "He just wants to make sure he doesn't reinjure anything. I've known him forever, and he's always playing at a high level. His mental ability to be able to pass the ball and stuff. ... He might not be at what he thinks is a high level, but it will be high for us."

D'Antoni also said that he is considering changing the starting lineup by putting Chris Duhon in for Darius Morris at point guard.

Morris has started all 10 games while Blake has been out, averaging 5.5 points and 2.6 assists while shooting 35.7 percent from the field.

"Offensively I did think that Duhon ran the team pretty well," D'Antoni said of Duhon's performance in the Lakers' 113-103 loss to the Orlando Magic on Sunday. "I thought that he had a nice flow to it in certain parts of the game."

Red Sox eye R.A. Dickey

NASHVILLE, Tenn. -- New York Mets general manager Sandy Alderson spent his first full day at the winter meetings discussing trade options for the reigning National League Cy Young Award winner.

Alderson said his Monday agenda has been busy with meetings with potential suitors for 20-game winner R.A. Dickey. The knuckleballer is under contract for next season at $5 million, but the Mets are serious about trading him this offseason if an extension cannot be reached.

The suitors include the Boston Red Sox, according to a baseball source. Red Sox GM Ben Cherington and Alderson met Monday afternoon, with New York looking for outfielder Jackie Bradley Jr. and shortstop Xander Boegarts in exchange for the Cy Young Award winner, the source said. However, it's unlikely the Red Sox would part with those top prospects.

The Mets met with eight teams Monday about Dickey, the source said.

Alderson insisted he had not resolved to trade Dickey, nor would he say the momentum had moved appreciably in that direction. Still, the GM added, he had not even spoken with Bo McKinnis, Dickey's agent, since arriving in Nashville.

"I don't know whether he's at the hotel," Alderson said. "I haven't met with him. I haven't talked to him."

Only six previous Cy Young winners have opened the following season with another club, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.

Alderson added about the trade talks: "Everything we did today was preliminary. We've met with several clubs on a variety of topics -- not just R.A. We expect to do that the remainder of the afternoon and maybe this evening as well."

He acknowledged also speaking with clubs about left-hander Jonathon Niese.

Alderson said he would be looking for "difference-makers" in return for Dickey -- not low-Class A prospects. He added that the incoming player would not necessarily have to be an outfielder or catcher, the two areas of most glaring need for the club.

"What we've tried to say to ourselves is that we have to get back difference-makers," Alderson said. "It doesn't have to be a catcher. It doesn't have to be an outfielder. It doesn't have to be anything. But it has to be a difference-maker. Because R.A. is a difference-maker."

Alderson insisted that trading a reigning Cy Young winner would not be an indication the Mets are pessimistic about their 2013

"Are we punting '13? Absolutely not," Alderson said. "This is not about making a trade for four players from the Appalachian League. You have to balance the quality of the player with the potential arrival date of the player, obviously. That's something we're trying to do. But it is important for us if we're going to do something -- and I want to emphasize, we may not -- if we do something, we want whatever comes back to us to have an impact on us as soon as possible."

Alderson said a resolution with Zack Greinke as a free agent definitely could affect how much the Mets could command for Dickey in a trade.

"Any time you're looking at a market, you're looking at options," Alderson said. "The more options there are, the more supply, the lower the demand typically. Working in baseball as it typically does, Greinke will have an impact."

The Mets might give a team a window to negotiate an extension with Dickey.

"Putting aside R.A.'s situation, any time you're providing a window, it complicates things and creates uncertainty," Alderson said. "It's something you'd like to avoid. If you feel you have to grant that, there might be some value to that. It's going to depend from club to club."

Asked if Dickey's popularity and potential fan backlash is a consideration in any potential Dickey deal, Alderson said: "It's a consideration, but in the event we're able to return a difference-maker, I think many of our fans are able to understand the value in that. We recognize the value that R.A. represents to us. But I think our fans understand what we're trying to do, where we're trying to go."

Most of A-Rod's owed money insured

If Alex Rodriguez is unable to play in 2013, or in a worst-case scenario is forced to retire because of the hip injury that will require surgery next month, it would not be a total loss for the Yankees.

At least not financially. According to a baseball source with knowledge of the contract, the Yankees are insured for a good portion of the $114 million they owe Rodriguez over the next five seasons.

According to the source, who has worked on similar contracts, it is likely that New York could recoup at least 75 percent, and perhaps as much as 100 percent, of the money it would still have to pay Rodriguez.

However, Rodriguez would have to be disabled for at least a full season before the team could begin to collect on the policy it has with Team Scotti, a Pittsburgh-based insurance firm that provides insurance to Major League Baseball teams. It is unclear whether the contract, which runs through the 2017 season, is insured for its entire length.

It is also unknown whether any exclusions were written into the policy that would void it in the instance of certain injuries, although at the time the Yankees signed Rodriguez to a 10-year, $275 million extension after his 2007 AL MVP season, he had been remarkably healthy, spending only three brief stints on the disabled list in his first 12 seasons and playing in all 162 games three of those years.

Yankees president Randy Levine refused to provide details on the insurance policy covering Rodriguez's contract, and declined to give approval for John Scotti, the owner of Team Scotti, to speak with ESPNNewYork.com. But in a recent article published in Insurance Journal, an industry publication, Scotti was quoted as saying insurance companies have put a five-year limit on policies covering "most professional athletes." Whether A-Rod falls into that category is unknown, as is how much the Yankees had to pay to insure what was the most lucrative contract in the history of professional sports.

The Yankees announced on Monday that Rodriguez, who will turn 38 in July, would undergo surgery on the labrum in his left hip, a similar procedure to the one that was performed on his right hip before the 2009 season. The team said it expects his recovery to take four to six months, which places his return to action in late June at the earliest.

According to Chris Lack of Exceptional Risk Advisers, a firm that also insures professional athletes, the coverage on a contract the size of A-Rod's was likely spread out over several insurance companies.

"No one would take that on themselves," he said.

Lack also said that Rodriguez's latest injury would not necessarily make it impossible for the Yankees to trade him at some point in the future -- if they are able to transfer the insurance policy to the next team along with the contract.

After a four-six week period of pre-rehabilitation, Rodriguez will undergo arthroscopic surgery by Dr. Bryan Kelly at the Hospital for Special Surgery in Manhattan in mid-January. The surgery on his right hip, which cost him six weeks of the 2009 season, was performed by Dr. Marc Philippon of Vail, Colo.

The Yankees say Rodriguez's injury was detected in a routine postseason examination by Philippon. According to general manager Brian Cashman, the latest hip problem likely contributed to Rodriguez's poor performance in the playoffs, although Cashman said Rodriguez was "asymptomatic" and not in any pain during the postseason, in which he batted .200 and was benched for three games.
